Writing for Different Audiences

In English you will be required to write for a range of purposes and a variety of audiences.

In this unit you will learn how the audience and purpose of a piece of writing will affect its layout, vocabulary and use of images

The Audience Affect

Look at the books shown here.

- What age group do you think they are written for?
- Are they specifically targeted at male or female readers?
- Would they appeal to a 'specialist' readership?
- How did you decide?

The Purpose of the Text

Can you match the text with its purpose?

The Art of Cooking	advise, entertain, inform
The Time Machine	inform, explain, describe
Quitting Smoking	entertain
The Lord of the Rings	inform, explain, describe
How to Survive School	entertain
Civil Rights in America	persuade, advise, inform

Exploring Horrible Histories

Most school libraries will have a collection of Horrible History books. Your teacher or the librarian will give you a few copies to look through.

- How is history presented in these books?
- How are they different from a traditional history book?
- What sort of information do they include?
- How are images used?

Adapt your writing style to suit various audiences and purposes. Learn how to write for academic journals, conference presentations, grant proposals, and other professional contexts.
