Bennett begins by arguing that power is a dangerous thing. It can corrupt even the best of people, and it can lead to disastrous consequences. He cites the examples of Adolf Hitler, Joseph Stalin, and Mao Zedong as leaders who were corrupted by power and who led their countries to ruin.

Bennett argues that the only way to avoid the dangers of power is to remember why you wanted it in the first place. He says that leaders should always keep their goals in mind and that they should never let power become an end in itself.

Bennett offers a number of practical tips for leaders on how to stay true to their values. He says that leaders should surround themselves with people who share their values and who will support them in their efforts to do the right thing. He also says that leaders should be willing to stand up for their beliefs, even when it is unpopular.

Bennett's book is a timely reminder of the dangers of power. It is a must-read for anyone who is interested in leadership or who is concerned about the future of our country.
