Twelve-year-old Cece is a foster child who has spent her entire life in poverty. She has been passed from one foster home to another, never finding a place where she truly belongs. But when she is chosen to be the foster daughter of the President of the United States, her life is changed forever.

Cece is initially terrified to move into the White House. She doesn't know how she will fit in with the President and the First Lady, or with their other children. But she soon realizes that the President and the First Lady are kind and caring people who genuinely want to help her. They provide her with the love and support she has always longed for, and they help her to believe in herself.

Cece quickly becomes a part of the President's family. She makes friends with the President's other children, and she even starts to feel like she belongs. But she never forgets her roots. She knows that she is still a foster child, and she is determined to make the most of this opportunity to help other children like her.
