

Voices of Undocumented Young Adults: Their Stories, Their Struggles, Their Dreams

In the United States, there are an estimated 1.3 million undocumented young adults, also known as Dreamers. These young people were brought to the U.S. as children, and they have grown up knowing no other home. They are ambitious, hardworking, and determined to succeed. But their undocumented status prevents them from fully participating in American society. They cannot get driver's licenses, they cannot work legally, and they cannot access many forms of higher education.

The Dreamers' plight is a complex one. They are often caught between two worlds – the country they were born in and the country they grew up in. They face discrimination and prejudice from those who do not understand their situation. And they live in constant fear of being deported.

The Stories

The book Voices of Undocumented Young Adults tells the stories of 20 Dreamers from across the United States. These young adults come from different backgrounds, but they share a common experience of living in the shadows. They tell stories of their struggles, their hopes, and their dreams.

One of the Dreamers featured in the book is a young woman named Ana. Ana was brought to the U.S. from Mexico when she was just two years old. She grew up in California and graduated from high school at the top of her class. But because she is undocumented, she cannot attend college or get a driver's license. Ana's story is a reminder of the challenges that Dreamers face every day.

Another Dreamer featured in the book is a young man named Jose. Jose was brought to the U.S. from El Salvador when he was six years old. He is a talented artist and musician, but he cannot pursue his dreams because he is undocumented. Jose's story is a reminder of the wasted potential that undocumented young adults represent.
